

Results of Phthalate Testing in Children's Toys

It's a horrible fact: some manufacturers are using toxic chemicals to produce toys and other products that children play with and put in their mouths. In San Francisco and the United States, we've banned one of the worst classes of chemicals in children's products — phthalates. Manufacturers add phthalates to plastic products such as rubber duckies, teething rings, and bath toys to make them soft and flexible. But phthalates have unintended consequences: studies have proven that phthalates cause premature birth and reproductive harm, such as sperm damage and reduced testosterone.

In San Francisco, we've tested dozens of toys to find out whether they contain phthalates. To learn more and find out how you can take action to keep these chemicals out of children's toys, visit www.SFEnvironment.org/toxictoy.
